REAL farmers care about their stocks and would no more dream of treeping hapless animals out in the cold and the damp than they vould consider sleeping rough themselves. So they pamper than in snug purpose-built premises camplete with room sorvice and mains drainagely Hy where they can live happily tegether. Not that REAL formers are somewhat They know that no man can truely care for anything in which he does not have a direct financial interest on REAL FARMS all is pouce Nothing moves except the odd gaily pointed machine.

We went to Barmsley to meet Party Day and set off with a tape recorder to do an interview. Unfortunately the location for the said interview was the British Home Stores: cafe in Barmsley, and the quality of the tape was less than desired.

Salvaging what we could we compiled together the bulk of the interview and we hope this will suffice. Apologies to party for any inconvenience caused.

party Day are a band who do not fit into a catgory-that is to say, they prefer to invent their own. Their music is varied but not so varied that it doesn't appeal to snybody. They think the main reason why tney've not attracted a big record deal is because all the major companies are not prepared to take risks with small, unknown bands. Party Day have released up to date, a double A sides attracted as the companies are not prepared to take risks with small, unknown bands.

Party Day have released up to date, a double A sided single: Row the Boat Ashore/Poison, and a demo cassette- Sans Culottes. They were disappointed with the cassette and now think that it is a waste of time releasing cassettes as "nobody takes any notice of them".

Future projects include an E.P. (by a Beigium company - "Play It Again Sam", this will probably include Northern bands and also feature March Violets; a compilation L.P.; and a video (which will probably be available around Christmas).

The band are divided on a few issues, Martin wants to exp and the group but Cari and Mick think that the band is OK as it is. I think what Martin wanted to do was have a extra person for live work but not a permanent member. Party Day have a good following in their home town of Barnsley and the neighbouring city of Leeds. However, they don't seem to create much interest in Sheffield. We asked them why they thought this was the case, this is what they said, "They don't like us, notody likes us" This comment ended a brief and interesting interview. Apologies once again for not being able to include the whole of the conversation, nowever we nope we've captured the easence of it here.

Party Day are: Carl: Vocals and bass. Martin: Guitar Mick: Drums Contact them at: 313, Hough Lane, Wombwell. Nr., Barnsley